Kitty's CAT

KITTY'S EYES BLAZED angrily at her fellow bus-paseengers. "Well," she demanded, "what are you all staring at? Haven't you ever seen a cat before? Here, take a good look!"

As she held up the small furry bundle, there were shrieks of hysterical protest. "No! Throw it out! Get off the bus! If you don't, I will!"

Sure enough, at the very next bus stop, every passenger but Kitty scrambled off, leaving her the sole rider. Kitty and her cat, that is!

"Poor little thing," she murmured to the creature on her lap. "Aren't people mean? Afraid of a sweet little cat like you! Well, don't you worry any more! Kitty's going to take you home and feed you nice milk and fish and you'll have a real family like everyone else!"

But at home, Kitty met a reception that reminded her of the reaction of the people on the bus. Her mother, ecreasning, backed out of the kitchen and said, "Kitty, you take that beast right out of this house and don't come back with it!"

"But, mother, I'm surprised at you! Here I find this adorable cat wandering on the street, lost! Wouldn't you rescue a poor, lost little cat?"

"Sure, Kitty!" That was Will, her younger brother, talking from the safe distance of the hallway. "Only that's not a cat! It's a skunk!"

"Oh, what a nasty thing to say about a poor little thing that can't talk to defend itself! You're not perfect, either, you know! If everybody went around calling other people names, this would be a fine world!"

She stroked her pet fondly, running her fingers tenderly along the stripes down its back. "I wouldn't give you up for anything!" she murmured.

A sharp knock on the front door interrupted the argument. "Will, you answer it!" Kitty's mother said, "I'll not walk through this kitchen as long as that animal is here!"

"Okay, mom! Hey, it's a man from the zoo!"

A tall, handsome young man entered the house, walked right up to Kitty and smiled at her. Kitty's heart went pit-a-pat, very fast. "So you've got Gregory," the young man said.

"Gregory? Oh, you mean him!" Kitty held up her pet. "I was going to call him Junior, because my name is Kitty and since he's one, he'd be Kitty, Junior!"

"Thank you very much for taking care of him," the young man said, "but he has a home! A very nice home, with lots to eat! And his friends care so much about him, there's a reward for you for having found him! Gregory's a very valuable skunk!"

"See?" Kitty proudly faced her family. "I told you!"

"You told us nothin!" Will sneered. "You thought he was a cat!"

"I did not!" Kitty blushed a deep red. "I knew all along!"

The young man from the zoo smiled at Kitty once more. "Sure you did! No girl would be so dumb that she wouldn't know a skunk when she saw one!"

Kitty's heart did flip-flops. "Shall we take Gregory home?" she said.

HOW CAN I SHOW YOU MY LICENSE WHEN I'M NOT EVEN MARRIED?

I DON'T MEAN MARRIAGE LICENSE! I MEAN DRIVER'S LICENSE!

OH, WELL, THEY WOULDN'T GIVE ME ONE BECUZ I DIDN'T KNOW HOW TO DRIVE!

THEN HOW COME YOUR DRIVING?

I HAVE TO LEARN IF I WANT TO GET A LICENSE, SILLY!

LOOK, LADY, I'LL LET YOU GO THIS TIME, BUT I DON'T WANT TO SEE YOU DRIVING THIS CAR AGAIN!

OOO! THANK YOU, GOODBYE!

1 HOUR LATER...

WELL FOR... IT'S THAT NUTTY BABE AGAIN!

I THOUGHT I TOLD YOU I DIDN'T WANT TO SEE YOU DRIVING THIS CAR AGAIN!

WELL, IF YOU DIDN'T WANT TO SEE ME, WHY DID YOU LOOK?

HOW WOULD YOU LIKE ME TO TAKE YOU TO JAIL?

IT'S NICE OF YOU TO ASK ME, BUT I DON'T GO ON DATES WITH STRANGERS,... FRESH!

BRIEF^{ooo} But BEAUTIFUL!

WHO SAYS MODELS are dumb?" Liz asked herself as she pushed her way out of the department store, a tiny parcel clutched under her shapeless arm. "Guess I'm smart enough to know a big bargain when I see one!"

If it was a big bargain, it was the smallest big bargain imaginable! For Liz had bought a bathing suit not very much larger than the price tag attached to it. What the suit lacked in proportions, however, was more than supplemented by its color, which was a shade called "double-shocking magenta". And it certainly was.

Catching a glimpse of a clock through a store window, Liz hastened her steps. "I make it a rule," she reminded herself virtuously, "never to be later than an hour! Besides, the boss will be wondering what happened to me!"

To her relieved amazement, the boss was not in sight when she returned to the showroom where high-fashion coats were displayed to buyers from all over the country. Slipping into the dressing room, Liz did a quick makoup job with a practiced hand, making her eyes a startling blue by outlining them in pencil and shadowing them with silver. As she brushed her lipstick smoothly into the corners of her mouth, she was reminded by its color of her big little bargain.

"Double-shocking magenta! I'll just slip into the suit and see..."

The lure of that bathing suit was too much for her. In less than a minute, Liz had stepped out of her street clothes and into that bright brevity. And exactly at that moment, two gorgeous creatures rushed into the dressing room, their voices full of reproach.

"Liz, where've you been? The boss is wild!"

"Do you know who's here? Mr. Conner!"

And from outside the dressing room, came the boss's voice, full of irate command: "Make it snappy, you girls! And where's Liz? Has she turned up yet? I'm going to fire that girl...wanted her to show the gray fleece coat with the fur lining..."

Trembling, Liz reached for the coat she was to model before one of the most important coat buyers in the industry. The other girls eased into coats, adjusted them so they would fall smoothly and urged Liz, "Come on! The boss is sore!"

In the armchair reserved for top-bracket buyers, sat Mr. Conner, looking sour. He viewed the coats as they went by, his mouth contemptuous. Then, as Liz swept towards him, his face grew somewhat interested.

"Not bad," he remarked, viewing the gray fleece. "Let's see the lining."

Instead of complying, Liz hugged the coat tightly around her.

The boss, his face livid, hissed, "You heard Mr. Conner! Show him the lining!"

Liz gulped. "But...but..." Then, seeing that her boss might possibly explode, she said mournfully, "All right!"

The boss gasped. Mr. Conner gasped. Everyone in the showroom gasped. Under the heavy gray fleece coat, which was lined in fur, were two small patches of phosphorescent satin in a color known as "double-shocking magenta". It was crazy, wild, ridiculous!

Mr. Conner smiled. It was the first time he had ever smiled in a showroom, while on business. "Very clever! Very dramatic!"

"Am...am I fired?" Liz asked.

"Not exactly," her boss replied.

"You're getting a raise!"
